

Pragmatic Features in Korean English

Korea University
Kim, Hyun-Jin

Awkward or Inappropriate Expressions

1) "Teacher!" "Professor!"

- ◆ Koreans feel uncomfortable calling teachers by their first names in English.
- ◆ For NSs, it may sound too polite and inappropriate.

2) Frankly speaking

- ◆ NS: This is my favorite song.
What do you think?
- ◆ KS: Frankly speaking, I like this music.

2) Frankly speaking

- Korean expression for “Frankly speaking”
 - ▶ as a routine or an emphasis
- NSs - to introduce a statement which might offend the listener, or which might be impolite.

3) 'You'd better~'

- Old lady: How can I get to the hospital?
- KS: You'd better take a bus.

3) 'You'd better~'

- For NSs, 'You'd better~.'
 - ▶ a strong command or a threat
- Problem? Koreans use this expression for giving friendly advice.
- Reason? misleading textbooks or teachers' instruction

4) Promise

- Korean word for promise (yaksok) can mean either ‘promise’ or ‘appointment’
- In English, ‘promise’ or ‘appointment’ are two different words.

Characteristics of Korean English in Speech Acts

1) Apology

KS

- I am sorry. Can you pass me the salt, please?
(in the restaurant)

1) Apology

- Korean use "I am sorry" very often
- NSs : only when they want to express great degree of responsibility
- "Excuse me"

2) Compliment-response

- “No” as a response to compliment
- to show modesty and politeness in Korean culture
- Native speakers response
 - ▶ “Thank you.”

KS: Your jacket is cute.

NS: I like your jacket.

- "NP (Your jacket) + be verb (is)+ Adjective (cute)"
- We rarely use "I like/love NP"
(I like your jacket.)
- Korean words for "like" or "love"
 - ▶ not used in compliment

3) Thanking

- NS: Thank you for your help.
- KS: Oh, no!

3) Thanking

- Common Response- "No, no."
 - ◀ from Korean culture
- Limited expressions :
 - "Thank you very (so) much"
 - "Thank you for your~"
- Rare use of a verb "appreciate"

4) The Use of “OK”

- When Koreans refuse to some offer, many people say "It's OK".
- In Korean “It’s OK” has several meanings.
- The meaning can make native speakers or other NNSs confused.