School of Culture, Media and Society:

Our school particularly requests prospective students to have following qualities and abilities.

Prospective students need to be eager to work hard for a degree with an understanding of our philosophies and goals: to “explore cultural manifestations and structures, analyze representations, create literature, and discuss the nature of human beings and society in order to conceive cultures suitable for new eras” and “apply the wisdom of cultural studies to the issues of the present day and daringly transcend the bounds of existing academic disciplines, favoring interdisciplinary approaches to learning.”

Prospective students need to have a certain level of basic academic ability to complete their studies after admission with an understanding of our curriculum ranging from foundation-level to specialty courses. They also need to have accumulated a broad range of academic knowledge and experience before their entry into our school.
