“Halal Matters in Glocalization: Cultures, Societies, and Politics”

The Arabic term ‘halal’ literally means ‘lawful’ or ‘permitted’ under Islamic law and describes the cultural conduct for Muslim in all aspects of everyday life. With today’s increasing global awareness of religious market, the word and concepts of halal more and more attracts both Muslims and Non-Muslims, which has been shaped into modern halal that means not only religious and ethic values but also includes industrial values. However interpretation and implementation of the modern halal is sometimes controversial today. Based on my fieldwork at the several countries in Asia, the presentation will introduce about what halal means, how and who conduct today’s halal matters and create new cultural values or social activities. Further, it explores the dialogue between religious norms and cultural habits in Multicultural societies.

“An overview on 20 years of corporate governance research: Lessons learned and future avenues of research”

During the seminar I present my research projects on corporate governance.

They cover several topics like board of directors, ownership structures and business groups, codes of good governance. Empirical studies cover sample of companies from Italy, but also from Norway, India, and several other countries. At the end I will highlight what I learned and what will be potential future projects.
